

Military Justice Went Formal

When the Eisenhowers went upstairs to their apartment, they took Gen. Gruenther with them. Most people left then, but about 100 stayed for a few dances. On the dance floor were Secretary of the Air Force and Mrs. Quarles, Air Force Lt. Gen. and Mrs. Charles P. Cabell, and Maj. and Mrs. Leigh Wade.

SECRETARY of the Navy Thomas, who said, "This is unification working," was taking a whirl around the floor with Mrs. Wilbur Brucker, while Secretary of the Army Brucker was dancing with Mrs. Thomas.

Others "tripping the light fantastic" were Paymaster General of the Navy and Mrs. Ralph Arnold, Lt. Gen. Walter Weible, who recently retired, and Mrs. Weible, who say they are now living at Luxmanor, Md., and the Judge Advocate General of the Air Force and Mrs. Reginald Harmon.

The heads of the women's armed services wore their dress uniforms—long, floor-length straight skirts, gold braided mess jackets, worn with white blouses and gold tiaras, with the exception of the Marine Corps Director Col. Julia Hamblett, whose tiara was red with gold braid.

Gen. Claire Chenrault was there with his Chinese wife and said it was his first White House reception in 20 years.
